Their responsibility is always serious and weighty, and it is, to say the least of it, very hard that they should be exposed to the haunting fear that, in the course of their voyage, they may suddenly strike upon some jagged reef, the existence of which they had previously no suspicion, through the neglect of the Department whose duty it is to provide | the family of the possessor holds an immunity against such contingencies by a proper survey of the coast. It is none the less grievous that, through the same neglect, passengers up the coast are placed in constant peril of their lives. All rumoured dangers should be promptly investigated. M. Cosson, another eminent authority, and who seems to take an opposite view to Dr. Hooker, has communicated to the Paris Geographical Society a note on the subject, and alludes to the success which has attended its acclimatization in other countries than Australia. Although discovered in 1791, it was not till 1854 that it was known beyond the presincts of botanic gardens. M. Ramel, who happened to see some fine specimens in the Melbourne Gardens, was much struck with them; and ascertained from Baron DB MULLER, the Director, that the tree was an excellent feverdispelling agent, was easily acclimatized rapid of growth, and afforded capital timber for ship-building. Chiefly through the help of the Acclimatization Society and the Nam Sang, Foreign Shoemaker's Shop (which Museum of Natural History at Paris, and the Experimental Gardens in Algiers, the tree has been successfully introduced into Southern France, Corsica, Algeria, Spain, Portugal, Egypt, Senegal, Madagascar, Réunion, the Cape, Guiana, Guadaloupe, Tahiti, India, New Caledonia, and other places. In Algeria the experiment has proved most successful. At Ain-Mokra, on the banks of Lake Fezara, the few inhabitants were almost decimated by fevers, and the rich iron mines of Mokta, adjoining, were in consequence abandoned in summer; some hundreds of trees planted on the shores of the lake have rendered the place quite healthy TR. Vienna can fairly bosst of having now the finest opera-house in Europe. It cost half-amillion sterling, and the site, which is isolated, was given by the Town Council. Enormous expense was gone to for ventilation and for warming and cooling the theatre, according to the temperature. The underground arrangements for the purpose are quite a curiosity; the whole is regulated by a director, who communicates telegraphically with every part of the house, for the comfort of the gallery visitors has been secured as well as that of the occupants of the stalls. The auditorium is free from the massive ornaments which render the interior of the Paris Grand Opera-house so-heavy: but in the travel of sound, the apperiority of the Vienna theatre is questionable. The line of sight has been skilfully treated, so that the full, command of a view of the stage is secured for the extreme side seats. AMONG THE GLACIERS. Land of the Beacon hills that flame up white, And-spread as from on high a word sublime,

How is it that upon the roll of Time Thy sons have rarely writ their names in light? . Land where the voices of loud waters throng, Where avalanches strike the mountain's side, ---Here men have wiv'd and toil'd, have wep't and died,

And all in silence hearken'd to thy song-Is it the vastness of the temple frowning On changing symbols of the artist's faith, Is it the volume of the music drowning The atterance of his fruit and flecting breath,

That shames all forms of worship and of praise. Save the still service of labourious days? EMILY PREIFFER. -Spectator.
